Frequently Asked Questions

Who should make the determination of Priority for Services (PFS)?

Typically, the migrant director and the family liaison makes these determinations. However, if you have a graduation specialist, he or she could also assist. Since the criteria is objective, the determination is fairly easy to do.

When should we make the determination of Priority for Services (PFS)?

You should make this determination annually in the fall for any returning students and then throughout the year as new students arrive. Remember, you are looking back at educational interruptions in the preceding 12 months (during the regular school year), so some students may be PFS who moved into the district during the preceding school year.

How long is a migrant student eligible for Priority for Services?

The determination of PFS is for one year, however, in practice this is until the end of the performance period or September 1st. For example, if a student is identified in the spring, he or she should still be part of the new process of determination in the fall of the following year.

What do we do with the information once we have made a determination?

Migrant staff, teachers and administrators should be aware of who is PFS. The law requires that we “shall give priority to migratory children who have made a qualifying move within the previous 1 year period and who are failing, or most at risk of failing, to meet the challenging State academic standards; or have dropped out of school. [1304 (d)]” In order to give them priority, we must either serve them “first” or with greater intensity than other migrant students. These students have already shown that they are at greater risk of not succeeding academically. Finding ways to ensure that they are receiving extra support through the migrant program is critical.

Example of PFS services: One method includes a three pronged approach of case management. It would include coordinating services with other federal programs to ensure that these students are receiving the academic services they need. Second, it would include mentoring of the student on a regular and frequent basis. And finally, the migrant staff person would ensure that these vulnerable students are supported through regular communication and support to their parents.
