The curriculum teaches the signs and symptoms of SBS and the physical results of SBS-related brain injuries. It also helps students develop a plan for frustration and stress when dealing with a crying infant. The simulator cries and is inconsolable. Teachers shake the simulator to demonstrate what happens when a real infant is shaken. Accelerometers inside the head measure the force on the brain when shaken. Corresponding LED lights show the damage to specific areas of the brain in real time. The simulator's cries stop abruptly – for all the wrong reasons.
